Dr. Amarachi Oriaku Keeps Shining!!!!!!

The happy-go-lucky front page lady saw gates flinging open when she bagged her doctorate degree. Everyone wondered... "Is it because of her beauty, brain, or the campus where she got her degrees? Is it her poise? Is it her mien? What exactly is responsible for the showers of blessings upon our front page lady? Go ask her which God she worships. You'll find out! The angel is in the details.

Education Business

Learning institutions are going beyond just classroom teaching and learning. Some institutions are involved in real estate deals for the multiple learning dimensions such paradigmatic enhancements. Real Estate can be part of a university's Business curriculum as well as courses in other faculties. Such course may include Architecture, Marketing, Civil Engineering, Structural Engineering, Electrical Engineering, and other ancillary courses. Faculty members and some students have found business opportunities rendering services while learning. These opportunities grow an institution's economy as well as serve as the industrial attachment and internship purposes of both the students and universities.

Remember The Veterans!

Many families have sons, daughters, and other relatives who served the country. Some of them made the supreme sacrifice in war theaters. It is only fitting to talk about them, mention their valor, and extol their unique qualities as soldiers, family members, parents, children, etc. Who are the veterans in your life? When last did you give them the recognition they very well deserve? Think about the different situations at home and abroad in which these are friends and relatives laid down their lives for us. Their actions continued to provide the much needed that courage to live on, enjoy love and liberty as well as pursue happiness. These things would be very impossible without their input. At this time, remember that song that says, "I'm proud to be an American." Let us propose a toast for them. Honor them. Give them a gift. Visit those of them you can visit and make a good gesture that will be memorable. You will be happy that you made a veteran happy to be alive!

The Education Business — Professor Grace Freds, Ph.D.

Schools are in categories and levels. Education functionaries use creativity to organize and customize their terrains. Much of their activities are grounded in the specializations, experiences, and relationships those functionaries gain over time. Childcare is a great starting point. Educators have consistently seized that moment to give children the much-needed grounding to set the tone for future success of the children. Educators are paying increased attention to what the children should turn out to be. Therefore, courses and training orientation have occupied the minds of many parents and teachers.

Educating the child is the first step in maintaining a good education system. The business side of education is an unavoidable outcome because of the demand and supply forces that circumscribe every area of human endeavor including education. When demand for education is high, schools, especially private schools, charge high fees. Public schools may not charge fees, but the teachers often find creative ways to commercialize the system. Thus, demand and supply play roles in the delivery of Education.

The education business has witnessed an explosion because of the unbridled churning out of doctorate degree holders. Most of the new ‘doctors’ have their eyes on college faculty jobs. The field has also invariably seen glut because there are more aspiring faculty candidates than there are faculty positions. Consequently, hiring managers raised the bar to pursue highly qualified candidates. Incidentally, the factors of qualification include multi-dimensional experience in the field. To screen for this experience, interviewers grill the candidates in the area of practical teaching. Unfortunately, fresh doctoral graduates would not make it through the rungs of the interview ladder because they have not cognate experience.

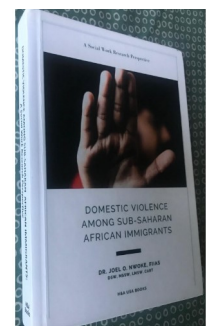

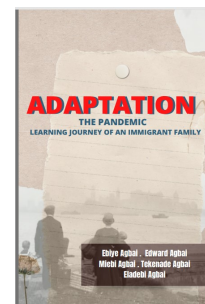

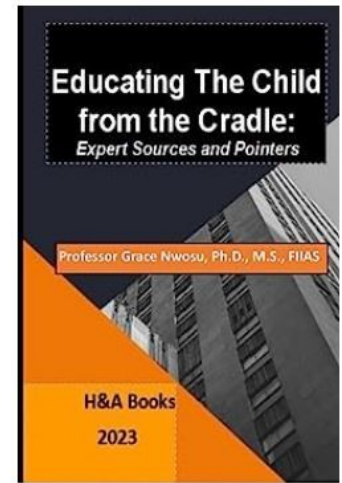

Interviewers want to know if a candidate (a) knows how to teach online; (b) has ever taught online; and (c) is currently teaching online. Hiring managers expect a “Yes” from every candidate on the three questions.

A ‘no’ on one question disqualifies the candidate. The business of education is a function of demand and supply, the mesh of droves of new doctoral graduates, the comparatively scant job positions, candidate interest indices, the continued graduation of new ‘doctors’, and several invisible items.

To enable new doctors who are aspiring to teach college courses answer “Yes” to the three questions, data collection efforts were initiated with a view to discovering institutions that could provide a respite for the aspiring candidates to enable them meet the interview thresholds. It was discovered that Emmanuel University, based in North Carolina, provided targeted training for doctorate degree holders who aspire to teach for universities. The training captured the essence of the three questions as noticed on the university’s website. The institution offered a one-year post-doctoral certificate in education with a substantial online teaching component

. The candidates gave strong testimonies as shown on the institution’s website.

The business of education thus found an avenue in the training received by Emmanuel University’s post-doctoral certificate holders who could now not only answer “Yes” to the three questions but also land the teaching jobs. Further than that, the practical exposure built into that program gave impetus to the creation of education businesses by graduates who decide to pursue the business aspect of education. Since demand and supply was prominent in the paradigm, an avenue thus exists to bring up experience profile of all the aspiring candidates who desire a stake in the education business be it as the kindergarten, primary, secondary, or tertiary levels.

Professor Frederick Nwosu who composed the NYSC Anthem Music in 1983/84 is still very much alive!

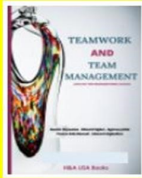

Frederick Nwosu, Ph.D., MBA, FIIAS Professor of Finance, Leadership, Research Methodology, Management

In 1983, I reported for national service at the NYSC Secretariat in Ibadan. I was deployed as a Lecturer to the Oyo State College of Education that was at the time using the Methodist College campus at Elekuro, Ibadan. I also created and hosted a television program called "IGBO BY TELEVISION" at the TSOS studios and taught Igbo Language on the show. During my service year, 1983/84, there was an announcement for Youth Corps members to submit entries for the NYSC Anthem.

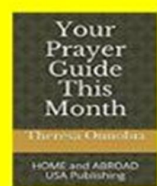

I submitted a martial piece that I carefully composed as a professional musician who composed and released "Everybody Must Farm" which reigned across the country during Operation Feed the Nation, Green Revolution, and MAMSER. I submitted my martial music entry. After all the evaluations (wherever the evaluations were done), the report came to us at the Oyo State College of Education, Elekuro from the NYSC Ibadan Secretariat that Oyo State had won the NYSC Anthem Competition. I was invited to the Director's office and informed that my martial music had won the competition. My counterpart called Deji who submitted the words was also informed that his lyrics won the lyrics competition. He and I were asked to work together to teach other youth corps members how to sing the anthem.

The NYSC Ibadan Choir consequently was formed. Being that I composed the music, I was called upon to teach the tune, and I did. After we had all started singing the anthem, the NYSC Secretariat Ibadan brought in two music graduates (one from the Ibadan Polytechnic and the other from the University of Ibadan) just to convert my composition from the Tonic Solfa to Staff Notation (sheet music) so that they could use instruments to perform the anthem, since we were getting ready to go to the recording studio to record the anthem. One of the young men was called Shobowale. I have forgotten the name of the second person. We (the NYSC Choir members) went to Phonodisk recording studios in Ijebu-Igbo. I sang the lead Treble part. We completed the studio recording and went back to Elekuro, Ibadan.

Some years later, I was invited to Sheraton Hotel, Ikeja to an NYSC function. On that occasion, Alhaji Bunu Sheriff Musa (one among the very first NYSC batch) was now the Federal Minister of Mines and Power. The Minister read my citation and shook my hands. That was all that I experienced (for which I traveled from Aba to Lagos). I did not complain. I remained positive. For me to hear that "the composer of the NYSC Anthem has died" shocked me since I know myself as the composer while Deji wrote the words. Please understand that I am still very much alive; yes, alive, residing in the United States, and working as a university professor as well as ex-President of the International Institute for African Scholars in the United States. Please find a way to convey the right message so that I am not damaged while still alive.

Whether you need a wordsmith to overhaul your website or just a few headlines for your next ad campaign, I got you covered. I'll work with you to understand the goals of your project and the minds of your customers. Together, we'll make your next project a success.

If you want whip-smart copy for your next 360 campaign, you've come to the right place. I'll write headlines that sizzle on a tight turnaround. Whether you want an Instagram sensation or you're kicking it old school with a few print ads, I'll deliver a campaign that delivers results.

You've created a great product. You've told the world about it. And a qualified lead has just hit your site. What do they see? More importantly, just how hard do they bounce? I'll write a landing page that makes your future customer stick around and take action.

Maybe you need to hit refresh on your whole site. Or maybe there are just a few pages that need a tuneup. Regardless, I'll work with you to understand your customers, your product, and what makes your brand unique. Then I'll deliver copy that makes your site professional, compelling, and profitable.

If you want to get noticed, you need to do something notable. Whether you're launching a new product, shaking up the C-suite, or making a major brand pivot, I'll craft a press release that will make the media pay attention.

It didn't take long for the email inbox to turn into a junk mail wasteland. Your customers hate junk—but your product isn't junk. I'll write engaging emails that stand out from the pack of unwanted messages, giving you and your customers what you both really want.

By 2020, experts predict that video content will make up 79% of global internet traffic. Investing in your video marketing is no longer a good idea—it's survival. I'll write scripts that will help you grab attention in a media saturated world.

Your brand needs to be seen as a subject matter expert in your category. My job is to make perception reality. I'll do the research to understand your customers and their problems, delivering engaging blog posts that position you as the expert—and your product as their next logical purchase.
